WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Wet unsettled weather will continue throughout the Northern California through Saturday as a series of low pressure troughs move through. Showers and thunderstorms will be more likely to occur in the mountains, but they will move to nearby lower elevations at times. The next trough to reach the region will do so late today, and precipitation will occur mainly south of a line from Ukiah to Red Bluff to Susanville this afternoon and evening. Snow levels will be above 6000 feet. The next system will reach the North Coast late Thursday with light rain. The showers will occur mainly across the north and east, and die off overnight. A third trough will reach the North Coast late Friday and produce heavier precipitation across the northern 2/3 of the Northern Operations region through about midday Saturday. Snow levels will drop to 4500 feet in the north and 5000 feet in the south. High pressure will return Sunday and Monday with warmer and drier conditions, followed by the next low pressure trough approaching the coast on Tuesday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Scattered afternoon showers and thunderstorms will continue mainly over the mountains and deserts through Thursday as a weak area of low pressure sits and spins over Southern California. Some showers may move over the coastal and valley areas on Thursday. A couple of weak troughs will bring isolated to scattered showers away from the deserts Friday and Saturday. Most mountain locations will see between a quarter inch and an inch of rainfall through Saturday, while the rest of the region will receive less than a tenth of an inch. Temperatures will remain a little below normal through Saturday, with mid-50s to mid-60s in the mountains and mid-60s to mid-70s in the valleys. Westerly winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the desert passes Thursday evening through Saturday evening. Strong high pressure aloft will build into California bringing a big warming and drying trend to the region Sunday through early next week. Temperatures will approach 90 degrees over the warmer valley locations by Tuesday. There will be light offshore flow across the region Sunday night through early next week.
